AT REVERE THE

ARBITRATE STRIKE ON H. H. HANCOCK

Civic Federation Steps in—President Curran Willing, Road's Position Unknown.

40,000 MEN MAY WAIT

With the hope of preventing a further round of the freight handlers' strike, which threatens to stop the city's traffic, the Marine Department of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, has agreed to the National Civic Federation's offer today to see if the trouble could not be settled by arbitration.

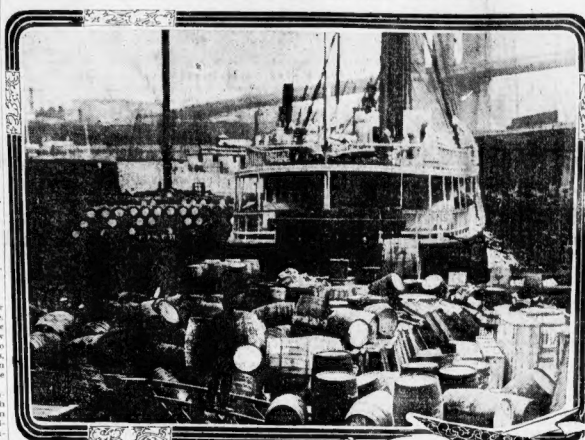

A conference was called at 10 Haven St. last night, in New York, between Ralph M. Bailey, secretary of the federation, an officer of the railroad company and President Lawrence J. Curran of the International Freight Handlers' Union.

President Curran declared he would like the matter should be arbitrated and suggested a committee of citizens to be appointed to write the matter. It is not known that the railroad will agree to this proposition.

Freight Handlers Out.
A dispatch to the BOSTON AMERICAN from Providence says that the freight handlers in the employ of the New Haven railroad quit at 10 o'clock today in compliance with an order received from President Curran. Mr. Curran, who has New York, declared that he had not yet seen the order.

The men went out, it is thought out of sympathy for their brother strikers. This lack of sympathy on the part of the handlers in the three large sheds of the company here, and Superintendent Thibault gave orders shortly that further strikers of freight should be refused to customers. He ordered all shippers to close closed and wait until the strike is over.

Superintendent Whaley had a conference with a committee of the freight handlers at Providence at 5:30 yesterday, from which nothing came. This morning he said that all the strikers would be paid, and that they were done as far as ever being employed by the company again.

Denies General Strike Order.
President Curran, in denying that a general strike had been ordered at all, stated that the marine department of the New Haven road, said:

"The report that I have ordered a strike of the freight handlers and marine from New York to Providence is entirely untrue."

"LORETTA BIRDSALL" HAS ESCAPED FROM HOSPITAL

Fair Boston Girl Who Chased Prominent New Yorker All Over Metropolis Slips Away.

Without lifting the veil of mystery which clung to her through a series of sensational episodes in the metropolis, the beautiful young woman who said she was Loretta Birdsall, of No. 87 Temple street, Boston, slipped quietly away from the New York hospital today. She had been taken there from Fifth avenue and Forty-first street, where she was found early today in a semi-conscious state following a violent attack of hysteria.

When returned to her home the young woman baffled every attempt of the police and the hospital physicians to subvert her identity or learn the cause of her evident mental distress. Only a threat of arrest made her give a name and address.

There is no No. 87 on Temple street, Boston.

Her Name Bishop?

A Boston woman, Miss Dorothy Love, of 7 Temple street, declares the New York description of the girl to be identical with that of Loretta Bishop, who resided by her home up to a few days ago.

Captain Carroll, of the New York Times, said today that the woman was taken to the hospital and the woman who earlier in the evening generated a series of scares by chasing a well-dressed man through the Waldorf, the Marlborough and to the Tremont Hotel, were identical.

The woman was first noticed at Broadway and Thirty-fourth street where she seemed a well-dressed girl. Throwing her arms about his neck, she implored him to go home with her. The man took her from her and laid her at arm's length.

BOSTON MYSTERY GIRL IN NEW YORK.

WHO IS SHE?
Pretty, blue eyes, fair complexion.

About twenty-four years old. Weighs 120 pounds. Height, five feet six inches. Stylishly and expensively dressed.

Wore white silk waist, dark silk skirt, gray jacket, blue chiffon hat, earring ties.

Harold and told the policeman he was his husband, that he was a physician and that he left his home in New England several days ago and that she had followed him here.

She said she stopped at a Broadway hotel and had made a telephone call for him. The policeman said either would have to make a charge against the other or he could render them no assistance. When they failed to act on the suggestion he ordered them to move.

Like a flash the man leaped away and dashed through the crowd. The woman was right after him, and with an excited crowd at their heels she ran east in Thirty-fourth street until the physician she appeared in the Waldorf. If he hoped to elude the woman in the man of corridors he was unsuccessful, for she kept right after him. In desperation he left the hotel and ran to the West Thirtieth street station. While the man was telling Sergeant Bowdler of the station the woman arrived.

"Don't Leave Me," She Cried.
"Don't leave me," she cried. A crowd gathered and a policeman approached the group. The woman addressed the man as

Said Man Was Her Husband, but Refused to Tell Her Story—May be Loretta Bishop.

been following me for hours." "Oh, come I have," said the young woman. "Why shouldn't I? You have frightened me and caused me untold agony."

The woman dared the man to make a charge. The man said he would have to give his name.

Just hold her for ten seconds," he replied, as he dashed through the door. Again the woman was left alone. She dashed him through a saloon at Seventh avenue, and when he boarded a car she leaped on the running board. He jumped from the car and she followed, and the chase took them both through Thirty-sixth street, where the man dove into the Marlborough hotel. While she was looking for him there he slipped upstairs and went out of the hotel entrance. The woman was slipping with perspiration. Her hair was disheveled, her hat awry, and when she saw she had lost the chase she went hysterical. She boarded a north-bound car and rode as far as Forty-second street. She was evidently headed for the Grand Central station, but turned down Fifth avenue, where she encountered her hysteria and was taken in charge by Dr. Thomas Strauss, who sent her to the New York Hospital.

The girl is twenty years old, of fair complexion, light hair and large blue eyes. She wore Oxford shoes and silk stockings. Her dress was a blue chiffon hat, white silk waist, dark silk skirt and gray jacket.

Miss Dorothy Love said to a BOSTON AMERICAN reporter today: "I have no doubt that this girl is one who lived at my home until a few days ago. Although Miss Bishop's trunk is still in her room."

"You Have Brought My Regret."
"There she is," he exclaimed. "She's

MADE BY PASTOR TO GOV. BATES IN FIGHTING "WIDE OPEN SUNDAY"

Rev. Dr. Bixby Declares That From $15,000 to $20,000 Was Paid for "Protection" Last Season—All Churches Unite in Battle to Keep Shows From Being Given at the Beach on the Sabbath.

"WE, MINISTERS OF REVERE, CONSULTING WITH THE GOOD CITIZENS OF OUR TOWN, FOUND YOUR EXCELLENCY, THAT UP TO THE TIME THAT YOU INTERPOSED BETWEEN $15,000 AND $20,000 HAD BEEN PAID IN GRAFT. HAD YOU NOT INTERPOSED I AM SURE THAT THE AMOUNT OF GRAFT WOULD HAVE BEEN TWICE THE FIGURES WHICH I HAVE QUOTED."

Thus spoke the Rev. Dr. T. F. Bixby to Governor John L. Bates at a hearing in the State House today.

The Rev. Dr. Bixby was one of a delegation of Revere and Boston ministers who appealed to the Governor to prevent a "wide open" beach at Revere on Sunday.

MAKES SUNDAY A WEEK DAY.
The Supreme Court decision which declares "wide open" Sunday shows of entertainment in the name of charity, they assert, makes a week day of every Sunday. They believe that the Governor can have the law changed by an appeal to the Legislature.

The Rev. Dr. Bixby's talk of graft referred to the situation at Revere Beach last year, when the local police allowed everything to run wide open, and Governor Hiram, on an appeal from the clergy, ordered the State police to raid the Sunday shows.

MINISTERS DID NOTHING.
At that time there was talk of craft and threats that the Suffolk County Grand Jury would be asked to take up the case. The ministers were satisfied with the shutting up of the shows and did nothing.

"TWICE AS BIG."
It would have been twice that amount had not you intervened, said Dr. Bixby emphatically. "When this agitation was at its height last year, the ministers and some of the good citizens of Revere, got together and considered what the graft was doing to the community."

"Our figures were as I have told you, some charitable organization."

Dr. Bixby's allusion to graft caused a sensation. Jews, not regarding the Christian Sunday, yet give to the morning or evening of the Christian Sabbath any kind of a theatrical entertainment in a public place, and thereby make our Sunday wider open than that of Paris," continued Dr. Bixby.

"Those who will take advantage of the law as it now stands are dangerous people. It is easy to organize a charitable organization. The sole purpose will be the personal aggrandizement of the promoters. I have been secretary of the Sabbath Protective League several years and am aware of several instances of the law as it stands on the books today."

BAR VAUDEVILLE SHOWS.
Rev. Martin D. Knapp, addressing Governor Bates, said: "We ask that you, as the Chief Executive of Massachusetts, save the name and honor of the old Bay State by asking the legislative body, which ever looks to you for counsel, to enact a law which will prevent the degradation of the Lord's Day. Without your assistance we are helpless. We want to send a message to the Legislature to prevent the presentation on the Lord's Day of vaudeville shows and other theatrical performances. The May to the Supreme Judicial Court set aside the decision of the Municipal Court regarding the legality of such entertainments, which violate the sanctity of the Lord's Day under the guise of being for the benefit of some charitable organization."

Reverend Dr. Bixby, who is a native of Revere, is a member of the Revere Baptist Church. He is a native of Revere, and is a member of the Revere Baptist Church.

SOCIETY WOMAN TRIES SKILL AS HIGH KICKER

LIVES ON BEACON STREET, BUT DANCES BEFORE SCOLLY SQUARE CROWD.

When a fashionable dressed woman said to be a member of a prominent household, living on Beacon street, tried to kick his bottom off in Scollay square this morning, Petermann Mikerson, of Station 5, was about to take her to a cell on the charge of intoxication, when his heart changed and he called a cab and told the driver to take her home. A resolution that she was in danger of being taken to the station house as a prisoner had a sobering effect upon the woman, and she whispered her name. Neither the policeman nor the cabman would reveal it.

"She just took a little too much and needed to be sent home," is all the police would say. Before he arrived at her home, when she was the centre of a crowd which rivaled a theatre audience in numbers.

WITH each succeeding generation, Nature's carving for the head of the male of the human species comes to grow more and more manly. Hairiness is supererogatory, and therefore possible means of preventing it, including theories accounting for the cause of it, are constantly under discussion. A recent issue of the scientific journal Nature treats the subject quite exhaustively.

Public attention has been recently directed to the heads of the civil service, and the heads of the military, with particular not advantage. We have here one of the attempts of well-meaning reformers to regulate on rational principles the dress of man, and so to assist him in his work of self-adaptation to his surroundings and needs. The object is laudable, and in all practical respects is feasible. But the reformers, by neglecting to consult with the reformers, but it may be well to review the question on somewhat broad lines.

has been produced.

There is considerable evidence that is spite of the stability of this character the signs of the hair on the head of man, sexuality in the male and the female, the complexity of the conditions of declining life renders it impossible to prove that this is a function of asexual reproduction and the inability of asexual selection to arrest decline, but it is highly probable that this is a function of asexual reproduction.

Thus, the decline of asexual reproduction is a question. Is this a decline in the growth of hair part of a general phenomenon of decline in the growth of the hair of the factor introduced by man himself? It is declared by the proformers that the wearing of headgear is responsible for the increase of perspiration he does.

Whether the duration of the question is measured in terms of the individual's confusion and ex parte statements, and it is doubtful if evidence can prove or disprove the duration of the question. Experiment 1, from the nature of the case, sort of the question, because of the length of time required and the mental complexity of the problem it would seem that the nearest approach to a solution would be a subjective measure of the time required to solve the problem and from the lower and upper limits of the time required to solve the problem. The study of adaptive motivation in the "ontogenic variation" of Leri Morgan and the "ontogenic variation" of Osherson shows that they have also responded to the natural resistance among which they accept as long as there is no better way.

ALL of These Animals Seek to Rule Us

ROBERT CARTER

As Man's Body Is Made Up of All the Material Elements, So His Spirit Is a Composite of the Whole Animal Kingdom. Unless We Conquer Them, the Strongest Animals in Us Direct Our Course.

TO KNOW OURSELVES is old and wise advice. It was written above the door of the great Greek temple. It is written above the entrance of every successful career.

Know yourself and you may know what you can do. HOW you can do it, and especially WHAT THINGS INTERFERE and THREATEN YOU.

The most important thing is knowledge of our DEFECTS or of these strong tendencies, natural in themselves, that threaten to destroy our balance and usefulness, when they develop abnormally.

A million or more men on this earth have recently bought automobiles or bicycles. Their first thought is to KNOW the machine.

They want to learn its WEAKNESSES—which parts get out of order most easily, which break down, which need careful oiling and cleaning. We think little of a chauffeur or bicycle rider unless he knows something about his machine.

Is it not important that each of us should know something about the machine which he calls "MYSELF"?

And how many of us strive for real knowledge of the machine that is "OURSELVES," with which all of our work is to be done?

How much the man behind the gun knows about that GUN, and how little he knows, usually, about the MAN behind the gun.

The beginning of wisdom is to know that we know little. The basis of wisdom is knowledge of our limitations and "weaknesses."

Each of us has wise theories about others, quick perception of the faults of others. The theories are dropped and the perception vanishes when it comes to estimating our own value and possibilities.

A man—in his youth—plans out his future, and the last thing he takes into consideration is his shortcomings and moral or mental deficiencies.

It is usually the most timid boy that dreams of being a pirate or Indian fighter.

The cultured, egotistical mind most often elects itself a statesman in the future or the leader of the nation.

We make plans for ourselves without asking ourselves what we are.

And while WE PLAN the whole thing is being settled for us BY THE ANCESTRY BACK OF US.

Napoleon, the lonesome, bitter schoolboy, snaked in a corner dreaming that he would one day rule the French boys that laughed at his Corsican birth and accent.

His dream came true—but only because of the parentage behind him—IT'S THE OPPORTUNITY.

He had to have that dreamer of a father, that wonderfully practical and brave peasant mother, following lightning troops before he was born—up to the VERY HOPES of his birth.

Many a man has had just such dreams as those that made young Bonaparte's eyes flash, many men have them now—and they will end by selling ribbon and laboriously paying for a lunge on the installment plan—they've got the wrong kind of ancestry back of them.

You cannot get out of a machine more energy than you put in it—that's an axiom of mechanical construction. And you can't get out of a man anything more than his ancestry has put in him—that's an axiom of HUMAN construction.

Opportunity, environment and education especially work wonders. But the material MUST be there.

"All very fine," says the reader, "but kindly tell me how I am to map out a plan based on my ancestors."

"My grandfather and grandmother are merely a hazy, revered memory, and to think of going further back and sifting up my chances by study of the different kinds of humanity blended in me, would be out of the question."

True, we cannot retrace the complicated prescription that has brought us out of humanity's big pharmacy. We cannot go back and sort out the various races, various tempers, various conditions that have made us.

That is why we ask you to study this picture of the animal creation sitting in the jury box and passing on our future. We do not urge acceptance of the theories taught by evolutionists. Certainly wise and patient investigators—Darwin, Lamarque, Huxley, Spencer, Huxley and the rest deserve respectful consideration. The marvels of embryology—showing that we go through all phases of animal life before birth are amazing—no sane man can deny that the embryological period is one of quick transition from the bottom to the top of animal development.

But there is no need to accept the proofs and the guesses of the evolutionists—those men are as far from the whole truth as are those that deny them.

We need not accept the theory that we descend from the various animals—that our conformation and even our brain result from animal struggles for existence. It does not seem sane to believe that the formation of a brain of rule this earth could have been left to chance, or that our characters have been dependent on the kind of monkey that had the honor of starting you.

This much, however, you may accept as true—You cannot deny it.

Of the joys that crown my days!
For the souls that sit in sadness
Or walk uninviting ways.

On the radiance of my labor.
That a loving fare bestowed,
Falls the shadow of my neighbor,
Crushed beneath a thankless load.

As the camile of pleasure
From my love-lit altar rolls,
There is one discordant measure
As I think of homeless souls.

And I know that grim old story
Preached from pulpits is not so,
For no God could sit in glory
And see sinners writhe below.

In that great eternal centre
Where all human life has birth
Boundless love and pity enter
And flow downward to the earth

And all souls in sin or sorrow
Are but passing through the night
And I know on some to-morrow
God will love them into light.

Maeterlinck Says We Are in the Hands of Strange Powers Whose Intentions We Are on the Eve of Divining

Copyright, 1904, American Journal Features

WHILE might it be said that from century to century a tragic poet has wandered through the labyrinth of destiny with the torch of poetry in his hand? For in this way has each one, according to the forces of his hour, fixed the soul of the annals of man, and it is divine history that has thus been composed.

It is in the poets alone that we can follow the countless variations of the great unchanging power, and to follow them is indeed interesting, for at the root of the idea that they have formed of this power is to be found, perhaps, the purest essence of a nation's soul.

It is a power that has never entirely ceased to be, yet there are moments when it scarcely seems to stir, and at such moments one feels that life is neither very active nor very profound. Once only has it been the object of individual worship; then was it, even for the gods, an awe-inspiring mystery. And there is a thing that is passing strange—it was the very period when the featureless divinity seemed most terrible and most incomprehensible that was the most beautiful period of mankind, and the people to whom destiny wore the most formidable aspect were the happiest people of all.

It would seem that a secret force must underlie this idea, or that the idea is in itself the manifestation of a force.

Does man develop in the measure that he recognizes the greatness of the unknown that sways him, or is it the unknown that develops in proportion to man? Today the idea of destiny would seem to be again awakening, and to go forth in search were perhaps so unprofitable quest. But where shall it be found?

To go forth in search of destiny, what is this but to seek all the sorrows? There is no destiny of joy, no star that bodes of happiness. The star that is so called is only the star of forbearance. Yet it is well that we should rally forth at times in search of our sorrows, so that we may learn to know them and admire them, and this even though the great shapeless mass of destiny be not encountered at the end.

Seeking our sorrows we shall be most effectively seeking ourselves, for it may be truly said that the value of ourselves is but the value of our melancholy and our despair. As we progress so do they become deeper, nobler and more beautiful, and Marcus Aurelius is to be admired above all men, because, better than all men has he understood how much there is of the soul in the meek, resigned smile it must wear, at the depths of us.

Thus it is too with the sorrows of humanity. They follow a road which resembles the road of our own sorrows, but it is lower and surer and must lead to fatherlands that the last comes alone shall know. This road also has physical sorrow for its starting point, it has only just rounded the fear of the gods, and today it builds by a new abyss whose depth the very wisest of us have not yet sounded.

Each century holds another sorrow deed, for each century discerns a new destiny. It is certain that we no longer interest ourselves, as we formerly did, in the catastrophes of passion and the quality of sorrow revealed in the most tragic masterpieces of the past is inferior to the quality of the sorrows today.

It is only indirectly that these tragedies affect us now, only by means of that which is brought to bear on the single accidents of love and hatred they reproduce by the reflection and new nobility of sentiment that the pain of living has created within us.

There are moments when it would seem as if we were on the threshold of a new pessimism, mysterious and perhaps very pure.

The most redoubtable sages, Schopenhauer, Carlyle, the Russians, the Scandinavians and the good optimist Emerson, too (for there is nothing more discouraging than a wild optimist) all these have passed our melancholy by unobserved.

(Drawn by John Barrymore.)

"We are in the hands of strange powers whose intentions we are on the eve of divining."

We feel that underlying all the reasons they have essayed to give us there are many other profounder reasons, whose discovery has been beyond them. The sadness of man, which seemed beautiful, even to them, is still susceptible of infinite ennobling, until at last a creature of genius shall have uttered the final word of the sorrow that shall perhaps wholly purify.

In the meanwhile we are in the hands of strange powers whose intentions we are on the eve of divining.

At the time of the great tragic writers of the new era, at the time of Shakespeare, Racine and their successors the belief prevailed that all misfortunes came from the various passions of the heart. Calistophorus did not hover between two worlds; they came hence to go thither, and their point of departure are known. Man was always the master.

Much less was this the case at the time of the Greeks, for then fatality reigned on the heights, but it was inaccessible and none dared interrogate it.

Today it is fatality that we challenge, and this is perhaps the distinguishing note of the new theatre. It is no longer the effects of a disaster that arrest our attention, it is disaster itself, and we are eager to know its essence and its laws.

What does it mean? Whether does it? Why does it descend upon us? These were problems in which the Greeks barely gave a thought. It is written within us, or is it born at the same time as ourselves? Does it of its own accord start forward to meet us, or is it summoned by convincing voices that we cherish at the depths of us?

If we could but follow from the heights of another world the ways of the man over whom a great sorrow is impending! And what man is there that does not laboriously, though all unconsciously, himself fashion the sorrow that is to be the pivot of his life?

The Scotch peasants have a word that might be applied to every existence. In their legends they give the name of "fey" to the frame of mind of a man who, notwithstanding all his efforts, notwithstanding all help and advice, is forced by some irresistible impulse toward an inevitable catastrophe. It is thus that James I., the James of Catherine Douglas, was "fey" when he went, notwithstanding the terrible omens of earth, heaven and hell, to spend the Christmas holiday in the gloomy castle of Perth, where his assassin, the traitor, Robert Graham, lay in wait for him.

Which of us, recalling the circumstances of the most decisive misfortune of his life but has felt himself similarly possessed?

It is well understood that I speak here only of active misfortunes, of those that might have been prevented, for there are passive misfortunes, such as the death of a person we adore, which simply come toward us and cannot be influenced by any movement of ours.

Believe you of the fatal day of your life. Have we not all been forewarned, and though it may seem to us now that destiny might have been changed by a step we did not take, a door we did not open, a hand we did not raise, which of us but has struggled vainly on the topmost walls of the abyss, struggled without victor and without hope against a force that was invincible and apparently without power?

The breath of air stirred by the door I open. One evening was forever to extinguish my happiness, as it would have extinguished a flickering lamp, and now when I think of it I cannot tell myself that I did not know. And yet it was nothing important that had taken me to the threshold. I could have gone away shrugging my shoulders—there was no human reason that could force me to knock on the panel. No human reason—nothing but destiny.

A Happy Heart Is Woman's Greatest Career

Copyright, 1904, by American Journal Features.

BROTHER Lyman Abbott has started the good old ball to rolling down the dear old alley again by asking in burning accents: "Should women with a career marry?"

The princess who is leaving the income answer to get out of her royal career and marry the man question is answered before it is asked.

Heaven's sake, let us be sure to ask the question in her somewhat eccentric manner.

"Once there was a poor man who ate but once a day and but a bit of black bread, two radishes and some salt at that meal."

Why not broaden out the discussion a little? Mr. Abbott? Make it, "Should women with a career be allowed to contract typhoid?" or "Is it proper for the woman with a career to be born of love with her as soon as you conveniently call. She isn't worth loving."

There don't have to be—

The man with a stained glass window in his house doesn't have to buy cheap paper shades to keep the glare out in midsummer, and the man with a good furnace in his basement doesn't need an old-fashioned Franklin stove to keep him from freezing.

Once there was a very poor man who ate but once a day, and but a bit of black bread, two radishes and some salt at that meal. As he was a hard-working man, he suffered greatly from hunger. One day he fell asleep and dreamed that a good angel came to him and said: "What will you give me for the security of three good meals a day?" And the poor man said: "I will give you my immortal soul."

"I do not want your immortal soul," said the angel; "it is too meagre. I could not use it. I only want you to agree to one condition. All the delicacies of the earth shall be yours—but one. You must do without salt." "What?" said the poor man, "I am tired of salt. It tastes of radishes."

And for six days the poor man ate of all the delicacies of earth—salmon.

On the seventh day he was hungry, but there was no savor in his food, and on the eighth day he could not eat, and he called the angel and said: "Good night, give me back my condition."

The black bread and the radishes with salt are better than all the delicacies of earth without salt."

And he woke and was glad to be alive and to find at meal time, and he ran and lowered first of all into the salt box, to be sure that there was plenty of salt.

Love is the salt of life. Without love there is no savor to existence.

I have a little daughter not quite two years old, and the greatest career I hope for her is the career of a happy heart. May she meet the "right man" and have sense enough to be such a fool about him that she would give up the selling world and the store that shine upon it for one hour with him. If she does not meet the right man? Then she'll have to do her playful best to make him believe that a career means anything to women but empty honors and heart-breaking disappointment and the loss of a bad bargain.

I would rather see her married to the man she loves, and living on one meal a day, than see her trying to pretend to be happy in a career with the income of a princess.

The plain, out-and-out facts in the case are, brother Abbott, that the average woman will a career may live without marriage, but she cannot do so live happily without love. She cannot and he a more human being, all the broader life and higher elevation in the world cannot beat nature. When Mr. Marcel discovered the wireless telegraph system, he did not see very curious paths to lead the eye to human happiness.

We do our best to shut our eyes to some rare, unobscuring facts, but the facts do not go out of existence because we are not looking at them, and I'm afraid the old lady who looks over her knitting one day and said to me, "Women are very much like men, only more so."

was answering right right, after all.

WENDIE BLACK.

the Night of Brown's Death

Dorset, N. H., Sept. 24.—White officers of the New Hampshire State Police are in the charge of killing William Jackson Brown, a Northwood man, on Thursday night last. Brown is well known, a farmer at Northwood, N. H., killed near his home on Thursday night. He was found lying quite dead on the ground. A revolver was still clutched in the dead man's hand.

Before shooting Brown, the farmer had covered his face with a fur coat, and his body had lain several days before it was discovered. It is supposed that Brown was killed Thursday night.

William Jackson Brown, a farmer in this county, was killed while driving home from the Rochester Fair Thursday night last. He was shot by a man who was with Brown and Frank Hill, also of Northwood. The man who shot Brown was Brown and Brown began quarrelling, and Brown was struck down on the head with a whiffawhite until he fell into the road way, dead.

When the driver he fell into the road way, Hill proceeded to his home on foot. Farmers found Jackson's body on Thursday night.

He arrived home, and taking a gun, revolver and a knife, and wrapping himself in a big coat, left the house without a word. His body was found about a half a mile from his house.

To-night, when the discovery of Brown's body was officially verified the authorities released Frank Hill, the only witness of the crime.

He had been held, pending Brown's arrest and conviction. The acids of Brown's greed robbed the authorities of his guilt.

Blue stamps than collect all other trading stamps together, because Blue stamps invariably bring the best premiums. . . . And because our stamps possess greater premium value than all others, many Blue Stamp collectors are importuned to part with their stamps, and merchants not authorized to give out our stamps, by questionable means obtain washed and cancelled Blue Stamps to give to their customers.

WARNING! Do not accept from any merchant any B. & M. Blue stamps that are not new and properly gummed. We will not redeem ungummed or washed stamps.

The first week's practice of the Harvard football squad of 1904 ended last night.

Instead of the dreary trying out of less green men, lacking both weight and experience as had been feared, the police work went with a snap and grin.

that was surprising and a bit hearing liarvard men. The candidates were a thing but stupid, and listened to ord watched others and learned things.

The undulating generalship displayed by Hurley, the little Charlestown captain, was perhaps the biggest of all of the sorcery with the weak practice brought about by the war.
